

Jeff Savlov is a consultant to enterprising families and is the founding principal of Blum & Savlov, LLP - Family Business Consulting. Jeff's specialty is working with families that want their wealth to serve current and future generations in healthy and productive ways. He engages families at the intersection of family dynamics and ownership, management and leadership of shared assets. Jeff speaks and writes extensively and authors a popular blog - "The Family Business Minute."

He worked in his family's commercial printing business before a career in sales and marketing and then returned to graduate work in family and group dynamics. Jeff is also a family therapist and certified psychoanalyst.

Currently, he combines all these experiences practicing as a family business/wealth consultant working with multigenerational, enterprising families and their advisors to help families achieve sustainability. Key areas of interest are: sustainability of family wealth, values led family and business, entrepreneurialism in enterprising families as key to long-term success, family governance, development of the next generation and raising children of character with a particular emphasis on starting when kids are very young.
